

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The purpose of this thesis is to fulfill the requirement of “Universitas Pelita Harapan” final task on the last semester. The basis of this research paper is by my strong interest in maritime affairs. The maritime affairs have been going on for thousands of years however, it is still one of the most important method of transportation, logistics, and economy. In this 21st century many nations are racing to secure their standing of their respective marine resources.

However, resource is not meant to be exploited only. Protection and conservation is as important on operating the marine resources of a nations, furthermore conservation is key for future generation marine resources. As two of the largest archipelagic nation I would like to see from the legal perspective on how Indonesia manage and protect its marine operation to Japan. This comparison intrigues me because Japan is well known for their product and their protection and conservation effort of their maritime resources, thus this paper purpose is to dissect legal product each respective nation operation and how we Indonesian can learn especially in the age of “Blue Economy”

Lastly this research could not be possible without strong support of many. I would like to express my gratitude and thanks to:
