The emergence of Covid-19 at the end of 2019 has attracted the attention of various media to report the development of its spread. The media, such as television, radio, print media and online media, reported the Covid-19 pandemic as the news headline, as well as online news accounts on Instagram. Instagram is known as a social media platform with the 4th largest followers in Indonesia and is dominated by millennials.

This fact attempted the researchers to do research about the effect of the news exposure of Covid-19 pandemic on Instagram on social media on self-awareness, attitudes, and behavior among millennials. This study used a quantitative approach with survey method. The population of this study were millennials who live in Tangerang. The data were collected by distributing questionnaires to 101 respondents. Furthermore, the data was processed and analyzed using the SPSS 26.0 program. The result showed, when the variables were tested separately, the effect was found, but when tested simultaneously, namely news exposure, self-awareness, attitude towards behavior, the only effect was news exposure to attitudes and behavior.
