

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, I would like to express my deepest thanks to God the Almighty. I could not do anything without Him who gave me extraordinary strength and ability to complete this thesis. I would also like to express my deep sense of thanks to the Dean of the Faculty, Oh Yen Nie, S.E., M.Ed., the Head of the Study Program, Dr. Niko Sudibjo, S.Psi., M.A., the rest of my thesis committee for their encouragement, insightful comments, and hard questions, and also all lecturers who had taught me at Universitas Pelita Harapan. I owe a deep sense of gratitude to Agus Santoso, S.Pd., M.A., Ed.D. as my thesis supervisor for giving me helpful feedback, endless support, and his keen interests on me at every stage of my research.

My huge and heartfelt gratitude also goes to all of my special ones. It would not be possible to write this thesis without the support and love from them. I would like to thank my dearest mother L. Sinaga, my father B. Hutagalung, my sister Weni, and my fiancée Violeta.

I would sincerely like to thank all my beloved classmates from Batch 43 A who were with me and supported me through thick and thin. Most importantly I would like to thank Melina Purba, Andreas Heru, Gloria Imanuella, Jessica Trifenanto, and Marthin Raymond. Knowing that the others are facing the same struggles and frustrations has been very comforting.

I also want to extend my thanks to the Administrative Staff in the Study Program of Educational Technology, Universitas Pelita Harapan, especially, Chrisnanda Putri, and Library Staff of the university, Phillips Wahyudi, for their help and support in the administrative works, and notifications that sometimes made me worried.

Last, but not least, my school principal, Yanner, S.Psi., M.Pd., the students of X IPA 3 and the homeroom teacher, Onna Hartati, English teachers squad, Michael Ayub and Bartholomeus Diaz, and Roslina Mariani. I thank them wholeheartedly.

Finally, I would say a big thanks to everyone who cannot be mentioned that contributed to the success of this thesis. May God shower them all with success and honor in their life.
