(xvi + 102 pages + 8 images + 23 tables)

Second-hand or used clothing is one alternative that can reduce the negative impact of the fashion industry on the environment, especially as opposed to fast fashion which has been proven to have a very large negative impact on environmental destruction. Public interest in second-hand clothing is currently experiencing growth, however, this growth is still not sufficient compared to the ideal, so it is necessary to look for factors that influence it, namely Functionality, Convenience, Perceived Hygiene, Personal Attitude, and Social Factors. This research was conducted by taking a sample of 280 respondents from the Greater Jakarta area using a questionnaire data collection instrument, while the sampling method and technique used were non-probability and purposive sampling, the data analysis technique used was multiple linear regression analysis using SPSS. The results of the study found that functionality, convenience, perceived hygiene, and social factors had a significant and positive influence on purchase intention, while personal attitude was found to have no significant effect on purchase intention.

Keywords: Functionality, convenience, perceived hygiene, personal attitude, social factor, and purchase intention.
