(xii + 184 pages: 7 pictures; 3 tables; 2 attachments)

The G20 forum has become a strategic platform which has developed as well as bridging the process of international economic policy coordination which cannot be separated from various non-economic and development issues. The Covid-19 pandemic and the Russia-Ukraine war became the most difficult challenges for Indonesia's G20 Presidency which further worsened the global economy and caused a multidimensional crisis. This creates a situation of complex interdependence within the Indonesia's G20 Presidency which then requires multilateral cooperation in various sectors and issues by involving various actors. Thus, this research aims to answer the question of how the transformation of the G20 increasingly shows the relationship of complex interdependence between countries and how Indonesia can take advantage of complex interdependence as a concept in the success of its G20 Summits. This research indicates that the G20 forum is a new breakthrough that reflects the multi-channel coordination mechanism in global governance to discuss a wide range of strategic issues. The three priority pillars raised by Indonesia has proven the consistent nature of the G20 to address the global economic issues while accommodating security issues which indicates a situation of increasingly complex interdependence involving both state and non-state actors in various sectors.
