This study aims to test whether abusive leadership can affect employee performance at a construction company in Indonesia. This study was conducted on 134 employees from a total of 152 employees in the project support service section. The analysis technique used is partial least square - structural equation modeling (PLS-SEM) using SmartPLS 4.0. for data processing. The results of this study indicate that all hypotheses are accepted, meaning that abusive supervisors, supervisor support and career development have a significant effect on job satisfaction which also has an impact on job performance. In addition, abusive supervisors have been shown to be able to reduce employee job satisfaction and increase job insecurity in employees which can have a negative impact on decreasing performance.
